The Sleep & Recovery Reset

7 small habits for women 30+

If you're tired but wired, you're not alone

You feel drained all afternoon. Then 10 p.m. comes and your mind won't switch off. Or you wake at 3 a.m. and lie there, thinking about tomorrow.

Maybe your workouts feel different too. A session that used to leave you buzzing now leaves you sore for days.

Both are really common for women in their 30s, 40s and 50s. Work, family, training, stress, and hormone shifts across different life stages can all affect how you sleep and how you bounce back.

None of this means something is wrong with you. Often it just means your evenings need a little more support.

How to use this guide

- There are seven small habits inside. Each one comes with a "Try tonight" step.
- Don't do all seven at once. Pick one this week, then add another next week.
- Keep what works for you. Skip what doesn't.

If poor sleep has lasted for weeks or is getting in the way of your day, that's a good reason to check in with your doctor.

This guide is free. The last page mentions one supplement option with an affiliate link, clearly marked.

Educational content, not medical advice. Talk to your doctor before changing your routine or taking supplements, especially if you are pregnant, nursing, or take medication.

THE HABITS

7 small habits

Pick one. Try it tonight. Keep what feels good.

1 Pick a wind-down time and keep it

Your body likes rhythm. Going to bed and waking up around the same time, even on weekends, may help your body know when it's time to rest. A short wind-down routine tells your brain the day is done.

> Try tonight: Set a phone alarm 45 minutes before bed and name it "wind down." When it rings, start your routine.

2 Dim the lights and screens in the evening

Bright light at night can tell your brain it's still daytime. Research suggests evening light, including from phones and TVs, may delay your body's natural sleep signal. Softer light is a simple cue to slow down.

> Try tonight: One hour before bed, switch off the overhead lights and use a lamp. Turn on night mode, or swap the scroll for a book.

3 Eat protein after you train

Your muscles use protein to repair and rebuild after exercise. On busy days it's easy to skip. A protein-rich snack or meal within a couple of hours of training may help support your recovery.

> Try tonight: After an evening workout, have Greek yogurt, eggs, tofu or a protein shake. Train in the morning? Plan tomorrow's snack tonight.

4 Take a short, easy walk

Gentle movement may help you shake off the day's stress. Some women find it helps them feel less stiff after hard training days. Daylight walks earlier in the day may also help set your body clock.

> Try tonight: Take a 10-minute walk after dinner. No pace, no tracking. Just move and breathe.

Educational content, not medical advice. Talk to your doctor before changing your routine or taking supplements, especially if you are pregnant, nursing, or take medication.

5 Set a caffeine cutoff

Caffeine can stay in your system for many hours. Research suggests that even coffee six hours before bed may cut into your sleep. Pre-workout powders, energy drinks and some teas count too.

> Try tonight: Notice when you had your last caffeine today. Tomorrow, try stopping about 8 hours before bed (around 2 p.m. if you sleep at 10).

6 Add magnesium-rich foods

Magnesium is a mineral your body uses for muscle and nerve function. Many adults get less than the recommended amount from food. Pumpkin seeds, spinach, almonds and black beans are easy, everyday sources.

> Try tonight: Add a small handful of pumpkin seeds or almonds to your evening snack, or stir some spinach into dinner.

7 Keep your room cool and dark, and breathe slowly

Many people sleep better in a cool, dark, quiet room. Somewhere around 60–67°F is a common suggestion. Slow breathing with a longer exhale may help your body shift into a calmer state.

> Try tonight: Lights off, phone out of reach. Breathe in for 4 counts and out for 6. Repeat 10 times.

Your reset at a glance

- [ ] Wind-down alarm set
- [ ] Lights dimmed an hour before bed
- [ ] Protein after training
- [ ] 10-minute easy walk
- [ ] Caffeine cutoff
- [ ] Magnesium-rich snack
- [ ] Cool, dark room
- [ ] 4-in, 6-out breathing

Educational content, not medical advice. Talk to your doctor before changing your routine or taking supplements, especially if you are pregnant, nursing, or take medication.

OPTIONAL

One more option

Food first is a great place to start. Some women also choose to add a magnesium supplement to their routine.

The one I point to is Magnesium Breakthrough. It's one option, not a cure, and results vary from person to person.

Before you look

- It's sold as a subscription by default. Check the price, the terms and how to cancel before you order.
- Supplements can interact with some medications. Talk to your doctor first, especially if you are pregnant or nursing.
- You don't need a supplement to try any of the seven habits.

See Magnesium Breakthrough

Affiliate link — I earn a commission

Thanks for reading. Start small, be kind to yourself, and come say hi on Instagram for more calm, practical habits.

SLEEP & ENERGY | WOMEN 30+

Educational content, not medical advice. Talk to your doctor before changing your routine or taking supplements, especially if you are pregnant, nursing, or take medication.